In the example above, there are a couple things that don't look quite right:

1. The email is from a non-SWC email address – that's always a red flag when receiving these kinds of email. Further, the email address is from a foreign country – .py is from Paraguay.
2. We don't track your location.

If the person who received this email clicked on the link, he/she would've been asked to enter a username and password. Nothing would've happened after that, except for the username and password silently being saved on the back-end of the form.

Be smart – do not fall for it!
